

Contributing Authors for The Journal of the Tennessee Speech Communication Association

Sandra W. Holt serves as an Assistant Professor within the Department of Communication at Tennessee State University, Nashville. At this date no other information is available about Professor Holt.

Valerie L. Schneider, Professor of Speech Communication at East Tennessee State University, teaches primarily in the areas of speech persuasion and rhetorical criticism. She has taught at several institutions of higher learning, and has published articles and delivered convention papers too numerous to list here. The title of her dissertation, earned at the University of Florida in 1969, is The Development and Application of A Neo-Burkeian Framework for Thetorical Criticism. Dr. Schneider was TSCA president during 1977, the first woman president of TSCA. Recently, Dr. Schneider has participated in programs a wide variety of educational programs for organizations other than academic. In addition, she has written and coordinated a newspaper course on persuasion, plus other newspaper series for non-traditional learners. Dr. Schneider has also served as Vice-president of the Tennessee Basic Skills Council.

Paul D. Shaffer serves as Director of Television Studies at Austin Peay State University, Clarksville, Tennessee. He has earned a BFA from Drake University, Des Moines, Iowa, an MA in Communication and a Doctorate in Higher Education from the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville. His main research interest concerns internships undertaken by higher education broadcast communication student.

James M. Stewart serves on the faculty of the Speech and Theatre Division of Tennessee Technological University, Cookeville, Tennessee. He has a Ph.D. in Hearing and Speech Sciences from Ohio University in Athens, Ohio, and has done post doctorate studies in the area of culturally and linguistically diverse populations and communication disorders, through Howard University, Washington, DC. His BA and MA degrees are in Speech and Speech Pathology and Audiology, both earned at Howard University. Dr. Stewart has published many articles and presented eighteen research papers at various professional conventions. His primary professional interests are working with students, helping them with their educational growth, and data analyses of speech apprehension in university and public speaking courses.

David E. Walker, Jr. serves as Professor of Speech and Theatre at Middle Tennessee State University, Murfreesboro, Tennessee. He has earned a BA from David Lipscomb College in Nashville, an MA and Ph.D. from the University of Florida. His thesis title is Invention in Selected Sermons of Ministers Opposing the Election of a Roman Catholic Presidential Candidate: 1960, and his dissertation title is The Rhetoric of the Restoration Movement: The Period of Inception: 1800-1832. Dr. Walker has a long list of publications, convention papers, and professional service to his university and TSCA. He has preformed several public service projects to develop communication skills in his community, conducted workshops for business organizations, and serves as a trainer for Zenger-Miller Training through the Continuing Education program at Middle Tennessee State University.